Rosehill Defence's FB6-certified ballistic blocks are engineered for optimum performance in live-fire operational environments, including target hardening and asset protection. Available in two sizes, they offer the flexibility to construct a range of temporary or permanent structures, and can be removed and used over and over again.

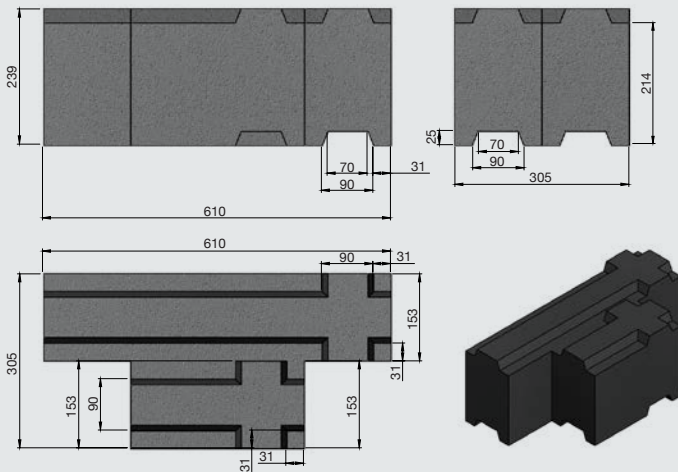

Manufactured from recycled rubber and bonded with polyurethane for increased strength and durability, Rosehill's Ballistic Blocks provide a practical solution that aligns with environmental considerations without compromising their primary function. They effectively absorb projectiles and fragments, significantly reducing ricochet, rebound, and bullet fragmentation.

Specially developed for ballistic use, the blocks have been adopted by military and law enforcement agencies around the world to build structures including guard huts and sangars, as well as to strengthen defensive positions, demonstrating their reliability and effectiveness in critical situations.
